Ring!!! The school bell rings as kids sulk into school. Well at least that's normally what happens. There are some good things about school. You get be with your friends. There are certain classes that are fun. The school activities are fun also. Those are some of the reasons I like school.

One, certain classes are fun. In social studies you get to acquire the knowledge of the world and its history. In science you learn about elements and scientists. In English you get taught about transitional words. There are a lot of entertaining classes.

More importantly, the activities are fun. You have gym where you play hockey, basketball, volleyball, and all kinds of games. Band, where you can learn to play like a real musician. Also, Tech Ed where you build model airplanes and small rockets that go so far up you can't see them. Last, there's Foreign Language, you get to speek Spanish, Latin, French, and German. There are a bunch of different school activities.

Most importantly, you get to be with your friends. Sometimes your friends can't always come over; therefore, you can't always talk and see them. When you're at school, you can talk to them in the hallways and at lunch. You can tell them what went on over the weekend and stuff like that. It's really good to be able to talk and see your friends Monday through Friday.

Nevertheless, most kids don't like school. "Sometimes you just have to grin and bear it," as my mom always says. You have to looks at the bright side of things. You do have entertaining school activities, fun classes, and you get to be with your friends. Ring!!!! There's everybody's favorite bell. The one at the end of the day. Everybody runs out of the school like a cheetah trying to catch its prey, so they can go home!
