

I would put things in the container that will not be known about. I would put a hat in the container. I would put a piece of paper in it. A picture of a tree.

The hat is for anyone who wants it. It was my favorite hat. It was the first fitted hat that fit me.

The paper is in case there was no more trees to make paper. If there was then they would know what to do with it.

The picture of the tree is to show what they looked like in case they didn't exist. If it does still exist then it's just a random photo.

I have never seen a time capsule. I don't want to see one. It's too much work.

This response reflects limited proficiency in expository writing skills. The writer selects items to include in a time capsule and organizes reasons to explain these choices. There are some errors in writing conventions, but they do not impede meaning. However, the response displays inadequate development and illustration of key ideas.
